

4 1963

RAIDS HURT

Commando Group Stirs Castro's Ire

HELD BY CASTRO.—Here are three of the Cuban exile group Fidel Castro last week arrested had been captured in a "CIA-aided" landing attempt. Pinar del Rio, May 1963. The group is accused of plotting to overthrow the Cuban government. The three men are shown in a photograph. The man on the left is looking towards the camera. The man in the center is looking slightly to the right. The man on the right is looking towards the camera and appears to be speaking into a microphone.

BY HAVANA PRESS

MIAMI, Fla., May 19.—However, neither the anti-Castro group nor the Cuban government has admitted the group's existence. The group is accused of plotting to overthrow the Cuban government. The three men are shown in a photograph. The man on the left is looking towards the camera. The man in the center is looking slightly to the right. The man on the right is looking towards the camera and appears to be speaking into a microphone.

The group is accused of plotting to overthrow the Cuban government. The three men are shown in a photograph. The man on the left is looking towards the camera. The man in the center is looking slightly to the right. The man on the right is looking towards the camera and appears to be speaking into a microphone.

REVEALS

The attacks have zeroed in on strategically important targets inflicting heavy damage on Castro's already crippled industrial complex.

A large petroleum dump at Caidá was shelled and set on fire. The group is accused of plotting to overthrow the Cuban government. The three men are shown in a photograph. The man on the left is looking towards the camera. The man in the center is looking slightly to the right. The man on the right is looking towards the camera and appears to be speaking into a microphone.

...days later, the hit-and-runners hit a large power plant and a metals-acid plant at Sagua la Grande on the north coast of Pinar del Rio Province, both on commission.

Last month, Commandos Mambises fighters inside Cuba destroyed a large saw mill at Cayo Guin in eastern-most Oriente Province.

The mill was the country's largest producer of railroad ties which are in critically short supply.

CRANE SUNK

Later the raiders crept into the port at Isabella de Sagua and sank a huge floating crane valued at more than $500,000.

Unlike most hit-and-run attacks made by other anti-Castro organizations in the past, the Commandos Mambises strikes were reported first by the Cuban radio itself and then confirmed from Central America by the group's spokesman, 60-year-old Rafael Martinez Pupo.

Commandos Mambises recently published a declaration in a leading newspaper in Costa Rica.

The group's stated aim is to destroy all means of production, and to otherwise, which is necessary to the continuance of the Cuban revolution.

DAVAGE

The attacks have zeroed in on strategically important targets inflicting heavy damage on Castro's already crippled industrial complex.

A large petroleum dump at Caidá was shelled and set on fire. The group is accused of plotting to overthrow the Cuban government. The three men are shown in a photograph. The man on the left is looking towards the camera. The man in the center is looking slightly to the right. The man on the right is looking towards the camera and appears to be speaking into a microphone.